"You don't mean it! However did they find it out?" "What do you say to changing the place-Washington, for instance!"

"Splendid!" "I have a scheme. There are several routes to Washington Suppose you take one and I'll take the other." "And travel all r'me?" (ruefully).

"It's only a few hours' ride." "Well, that is if you would be sur-to meet me at the station." "I'll arrange all that. I'll take a train that reaches Washington earlier than your train and will have a cab ready. I'll give orders for your baggage to be checked to Richmond and mine for, well, say Harpers Ferry. Before we're off I'll change yours, and I can change mine on the train. By Jove, it's a jim dandy plan. How we'll fool

"Are you sure there'll be no mistake about the baggage?"

"Of course I am. little sweetheart. Grave Danger From Socialist Don't turn pale over a small matter like that. Keep up your pluck and we'll have the whole town agog at a bridal couple going to spend their honeymoon in different places.

"I hope nothing will go wrong." He field her in his arms, giving her a kiss at intervals of from ten to sixty seconds, then with a clearing up shower of kisses went off to engage rooms at the capital.

The wedding was at high noon. The groom and his attendants were the usual priestly frock coat with the usu al enormous flower on the lapel. Every one wondered where the couple were going for the honeymoon, but no one knew. Then when it was all over the house was made as habitable as possi ble at short notice and the bride's parents retired to rest.

"What's that?" exclaimed the mother, starting up. The night lamp showed that the clock stood at 1:30.

"Listen!" said the father. There was a feeble hammering on the front door.

"Get up, pa, quick. Oh, heavens, what's happened? I hope it isn't a telegram.' The man arose, put on a dressing gown, shuffled into a pair of slippers, went downstairs, opened the door, and the limp form of his newly married daughter fell into his arms. A carriage stood out under a street lamp, and the driver, on seeing the lady admitted, drove away. The father carried his daughter into the drawing room and laid her on a divan. The mother, who had followed her husband downstairs, entered, switching on the electric light. "Louise!" she exclaimed, with a scream. "Oh, what is it?"

No answer. "Louise, speak to your poor mother!" "Let her alone, can't you?" from the

"Oh, papa! Oh, mamma! Such & dreadful thing!

'What thing?" shricked the mother. "Harry and I wanted to fool you all. We went out on separate trains to Washington. Harry was to meet me at the station. He wasn't there!"

"The villain! He's deserted you!"

moaned the mother. "No. I told them at the station what train he had taken, and they said there had been a washout on that road and they couldn't tell when trains would get through. So I had to come home."

"Dear me; It'll be all over town be fore brenkfast. What 'll people say?" "Stop your chatter," from the father. "Come, Louie, go to bed. It'll all come right tomorrow.'

He led his weeping child upstairs to her own bedroom, where he left her with mother. Then, turning in, he went to sleep with as much equanimity as if nothing had happened. Daylight was struggling through the slats when there was another rap at the door. It was heard by the mother and the bride, who awakened the head of the house and sent lum downstnirs. He let in the groom.

"Is Lou here?" "Yes."

"Thank God!"

"How did you trace her?"

"Telegraphed to the station. They sald a woman answering to her description had falled to meet her husband and gone out on a northbound

There was but one more voice and! ble in the halls till the servants were moving, and that was a pathetic wall of disappointment, an expression of profound relief and a maldenly shrinking. Then, to all appearances, "Sleep and oblivion weighed over all."

The mystery as to where the bridgi couple spent their honeymoon was never solved. Washington was the place reported, but the couple were not seen there. For ten days meals were surreptitiously carried upstairs by the bride's mother, who gave out to the servants that her octogenarian grandmother had arrived in the night. Meanwhile the groom had ten days of more andensed honeymoon than he had bargained for, and there was occasionally the odor of tobacco coming from the grandmother's room. One morning about 2 o'clock a carriage drave up to the door, a man and woman entered and were driven to a station. The next day the groom telegraphed that they would arrive on the evening train. Relatives were notified, and a large party met them at the station. There was no country tan on their complexion; indeed, several persons remarked that they looked as bleached preparations." as if they had been shut up in the MARY B. HAMLIN.

The letters of Miss Merkley, whose picture is printed above, and Miss Claussen, prove beyond question that thousands of cases of inflammation of the ovaries and womb are annually cured by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM: -- Gradual loss of strength and nerve force told me something was radically wrong with me. I had severe shooting pains throught the pelvic organs, cramps and extreme irritation compelled me to seek medical advice. The doctor said that I had ovarian trouble and ulceration, and advised an operation. Istrongly objected to this and decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I soon found that my judgment was correct, and that all the good things said about this medicine were true, and day by day I felt less pain and increased appetite. The ulceration soon healed, and the other complications disappeared and in eleven weeks I was once more strong and vigorous and perfectly well. and vigorous and perfectly well.
